Records of first fraternal organization for African Americans now open at Emory University

A digital finding aid for the records of the Kappa Boulé, the first black Greek-letter fraternity, has been added to the Rose Library collection at Emory University. The collection includes administrative records, the Boulé Journal, photographs, and personal papers of some notable members.

The Kappa Boulé was founded in 1904 in Chicago and later spread to Atlanta. It was a social, educational, and service organization for black students. The collection at the Rose Library consists of administrative records, the Boulé Journal, photographs, and personal papers of some notable members, including leaders and civil rights activists.

Enjoy the lighter side of Shakespeare in new exhibit at the Woodruff Rare Book Library

The exhibit "Shakespeare in Pop Culture" continues into modern times. The exhibit is a trilogy, the reach of Shakespeare's influence on pop culture, from costumed suits you. This exhibit explores pop culture's fascination with the Bard. From costumed insult cards, to a Bard twist on the Star Wars Wishbone and Barbie dolls, to Shakespeare's influence on modern times. The exhibit is on display until Feb. 26, 2017.

ATLMaps digital project receives Knight Foundation grant

The ATLMaps digital mapping project, a collaboration between Emory Libraries and ATLMaps, won a $35,000 grant from the Knight News Challenge on Libraries. The project allows people to explore Atlanta's history and development in new ways, giving users a chance to make connections among seemingly unrelated data. The material can then be compared in new ways, giving users a chance to make connections among seemingly unrelated data.

ATLMaps serves 21st century information needs.

The Knight News Challenge on Libraries funds breakthrough ideas that help libraries serve 21st century information needs. The Knight Foundation News Challenge.

Shakespeare postcard website.

A Shakespeare postcard website, which includes a Bard-themed rubber duckie, is available online. The project is part of the exhibition "Shakespeare in Pop Culture." The website features postcards from the exhibition, as well as additional information about Shakespeare's influence on pop culture.

The exhibition is on display until Feb. 26, 2017.