EMORY LIBRARIES & INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY

Keywords

October 2015

Emory names MARBL for alumnus Stuart Rose

Stuart Rose, pictured in 2011 with some of the rare books he donated to the recently named Rose Library. Credit: Emory Photo/Video.

Emory University has named the Manuscript, Archives, and Rare Book Library (MARBL) in honor of university alumnus and literary benefactor Stuart A. Rose of Dayton, Ohio.

The distinction recognizes Rose, a 1976 graduate of Emory's Goizueta Business School, for his ongoing support and recent significant gift to MARBL, which is now called the Stuart A. Rose Manuscript, Archives, and Rare Book Library, or the Rose Library.

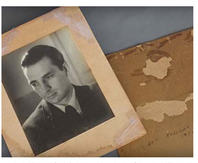
Read more about the naming of the Rose Library

Jack Kerouac collection comes to Emory

A rare collection of materials related to Beat Generation writer Jack Kerouac has been acquired by Emory University's Stuart A. Rose Manuscript, Archives, and Rare Book Library.

The collection, from Kerouac's brother-in-law John Sampas, includes a remarkable set of photographs of the novelist and poet from 1939 to the end of his life in 1969, and a range of correspondence with fellow Beat writer Allen Ginsberg and with Neal Cassady, the model for the protagonist of Kerouac's novel "On the Road."

Learn more about the Kerouac collection



A 1950 photo of Jack Kerouac is part of a rare collection of materials related to the Beat Generation writer. Credit: Emory Photo/Video.

Coca-Cola makes Goizueta's speeches accessible to GBS students and faculty

Roberto C. Goizueta.

The Coca-Cola Company has generously granted a license to the Goizueta Business School for access to the digitized transcripts of speeches given by former CEO Roberto Goizueta between May 1957 and September 1997.

"This is exciting intellectual content that speaks to the leadership component in business," says Goizueta Business Library director Susan Klopper. "It's an opportunity to learn about integrity and competencies, the things you want from a strong business leader."

Klopper says Goizueta's speeches will be rich learning material for the business school's leadership courses. Per the licensing agreement, access is restricted to GBS students and faculty.

Read more about the Roberto C. Goizueta speech collection

Slave voyages site receives updates, enhancements and translations

The Trans-Atlantic Slave Trade Database, one of Emory's first digital humanities projects, is getting new attention with some upgrades.

The website debuted in 2010, the product of a team led by Emory history professor David Eltis and the staff at the Emory Center for Digital Scholarship (ECDS). It provides searchable databases of over 35,000 transatlantic slave ships and more than 91,000 Africans taken from captured slave vessels or African trading sites.

Now Eltis and his team will work with ECDS to enhance, update and recode the website, thanks to a new Digital Humanities Implementation Grant from the NEH. They will also translate the site into Portuguese.

Read more about the project and the website enhancements

Access the Trans-Atlantic Slave Trade Database

Library's Faculty Services becomes Teaching and Learning Technologies

Faculty Services, part of Emory Libraries and Information Technology Services (LITS), recently changed its name to Teaching & Learning Technologies to better communicate the services available to Emory faculty.

"We wanted to name ourselves something more specific to what we really do and what we focus on, which is supporting faculty teaching and pedagogical in-classroom work," says Lee Clontz, manager of Teaching & Learning Technologies.

Learn more about Teaching & Learning Technologies

Emory Libraries in the news

We're making headlines in Atlanta and around the world:

The New York Times arts blog featured the Rose Library's acquisition of the Jack Kerouac collection.

Garden & Gun magazine named poet, curator and professor Kevin Young, who recently won the 2015 Lenore Marshall Poetry Prize, as one of "four standout citizens building a better Atlanta."

Emory Report featured an article about expanded services offered by the Student Digital Life center.

Find more articles and clips on our media coverage page.

From readings to receptions, don't miss a single event. Get updates sent to your phone or email, or add a reminder directly to your calendar. See what's coming up and choose an option that suits you.

Read our latest news, learn about our events and exhibitions, and see how the Emory Libraries are making headlines here.

View previous issues of Keywords here.

Help us inspire creative expression, scholarship, and new knowledge. Contribute to Emory Libraries.